

A Strange Record (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from A Strange Record
Dr. Ethel Leon sat in her neat office reading; Dr. Ethel Leon usually spent her office hours thus, and when the hours which her bright door-plate stated would find her at home were over, she, caring little for the social side of life, rambled all over the quaint old town of New Orleans, and tried to school her impatient spirit into passivity. For Dr. Ethel Leon had been qualified two years, and, except two street accidents, occurring providentially in the near neighborhood of her sign, she had not met with any practice. She found her sex a terrible drawback in the profession she had elected to follow, and so keenly enjoyed; and the prejudice against a woman-doctor was a hundred per cent, stronger in the South than in the North. If it was gradually dying out, as many were fond of saying, and there really was a promising opening for women in medicine, Ethel certainly failed to find it. She was probably the pioneer of the lady-doctors in New Orleans. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
